

INTRODUCTION

A marketing funnel explains how a customer moves through different stages before and after purchasing a product. Each stage reflects a change in the customer's mindset and the brand's marketing approach. The funnel helps marketers understand how to attract customers, influence their decisions, and build long-term relationships.

This assignment explains the marketing funnel of boAt Airdopes wireless earbuds using the following stages:

Brand Awareness, Interest, Consideration, Intention, Conversion, Loyalty, and Advocacy. The funnel is explained first from the brand's perspective and then from the customer's perspective.

PART A: MARKETING FUNNEL FROM BRAND PERSPECTIVE (boAt)

1. Brand Awareness

At the brand awareness stage, boAt focuses on making people aware of its Airdopes wireless earbuds. The brand uses social media advertising, influencer marketing, YouTube ads, celebrity endorsements, and music or sports collaborations to reach young consumers. boAt highlights stylish design, affordability, and sound quality to stand out in the crowded electronics market.

The main objective at this stage is to ensure that boAt comes to the customer's mind when they think of wireless earbuds.

2. Interest

Once awareness is created, boAt aims to generate interest in the product. The brand shares product videos, unboxing content, feature highlights, and lifestyle-based advertisements. Information related to battery life, sound quality, touch controls, and design is communicated clearly.

This stage focuses on making the product attractive and relevant to the customer's daily lifestyle.

3. Consideration

In the consideration stage, boAt tries to convince customers that Airdopes are a better option than competitor brands. The company highlights customer reviews, ratings, comparison charts, and value-for-money pricing. Availability on platforms like Amazon, Flipkart, and the boAt website increases trust.

boAt also emphasizes warranty, service support, and reliability to reduce customer doubts.

4. Intention

At the intention stage, the customer is close to making a purchase, and boAt focuses on pushing the final decision. Limited-time offers, festive discounts, combo deals, and exchange offers are used to encourage purchase intention.

Retargeting ads and reminder notifications help keep the product at the top of the customer's mind.

5. Conversion

Conversion occurs when the customer finally purchases the boAt Airdopes. The brand ensures easy checkout, multiple payment options, cash on delivery, and fast delivery. A smooth buying experience reduces hesitation and increases customer satisfaction.

This is the stage where interest turns into actual sales.

6. Loyalty

After the purchase, boAt focuses on building loyalty. The brand ensures good product quality, after-sales service, warranty support, and consistent performance. Regular emails, app notifications, and product recommendations help maintain engagement.

Satisfied customers are more likely to choose boAt again for future audio products.

7. Advocacy

In the advocacy stage, boAt benefits from loyal customers who promote the brand voluntarily. Customers share reviews, recommend the product to friends, and post on social media. Influencer reposts and user-generated content further strengthen brand credibility.

PART B: MARKETING FUNNEL FROM CUSTOMER PERSPECTIVE (USER)

1. Brand Awareness

From the customer's perspective, the journey begins when they see boAt Airdopes advertisements on Instagram, YouTube, or e-commerce platforms. Friends, influencers, or celebrity promotions also help create awareness.

At this stage, the customer only knows that boAt offers wireless earbuds.

2. Interest

The customer becomes interested and starts exploring the product. They watch review videos, check design options, and look at key features like battery life and sound quality. Curiosity increases as the product seems useful and trendy.

3. Consideration

Here, the customer compares boAt Airdopes with other brands such as JBL or Realme. Price, reviews, features, and brand trust play an important role. The customer evaluates whether boAt provides the best value for money.

4. Intention

At the intention stage, the customer mentally decides to buy the product but may wait for the right moment. Discounts, offers, or salary day sales influence the timing of the purchase.

5. Conversion

The customer finally purchases the boAt Airdopes from an online platform or store. A simple payment process and quick delivery confirm that the decision was correct.

6. Loyalty

If the product performs well, the customer continues using it and trusts the boAt brand. Positive experiences lead to repeat purchases or interest in other boAt products.

7. Advocacy

A satisfied customer recommends boAt Airdopes to friends, writes positive reviews, or shares feedback on social media. This completes the marketing funnel and helps attract new customers.

CONCLUSION

The marketing funnel of boAt Airdopes clearly explains how marketing strategies influence customer behaviour at each stage. Understanding the funnel from both brand and customer perspectives helps businesses build stronger connections, increase sales, and develop long-term brand loyalty.
